I have a manual Disco, after years of manual cars, but the car before was an automatic Volvo, and it was just stop and go, like an electric pedal car - just press one pedal to go and one to stop. It was so simple. When I was looking for a Disco I drove one automatic and because of my car being automatic, it was second nature.

Drivers can default to full automatic mode, make occasional manual interventions, or push the gear lever to the left to gain manual control. In manual mode, gear shifts are made via the paddle shift controls, or by pushing the gear lever forwards for downshifts and pulling back for upshifts, echoing the shift logic of racing cars.

I would always have the Auto over the Manual given the choice. There are two types of Auto the EDC one and the Standard Mechanical one. I've got the EDC one it does approx 28mpg and I only really do town driving, my father in law has a 200tdi manual which does approx 28mpg as well again mostly town driving.

IMHO an auto box lets me drive MORE SAFELY by virtue of getting less tired. For the same reason I use cruise control where possible which tends to also avoid speeding. Before my present Disco I used two Peugeot 406 s, the first was manual the second was Auto & had cruise control. Comparison of those 2 made me ensure my next car was an Auto. David

I had a td5 auto and hated it, as Wiltshire man said I was constantly thinking, come on change up you bastard, I felt if I was driving a manual I would not have had to drive it as hard to get it into a higher, less revvy, more economical gear. I only had it 2 months and got shot, I would not have another auto landy,ever.

Ok my third question . I did read the owners manual..... I read in the Manual that if I put it into Low Range and press the Mode button the gearbox should go into manual mode and the "m" light should come on , what happens is that the "s" light comes on telling me it is in sport mode ( i.e as if i was in high range) This tells me that I am not really in low range or a faulty sensor .
